His loyalty to the master who forced upon him a wife, his simple devotion was Charles Lamela, fifteen years old, who was delivering newspapers in Mill street. The dog jumped on him, to the woman who scorned him, the intensity of his passion when he learned the truth, and the frute strength which which he killed the knocked him down and bit him nine times before men hurrying to his resstrength which which he killed the violator of his honor, were admirably portrayed. Louis Kreldler, as Sebastiano, the master, also bore himself excellently. Lois Ewell, as Marta, looked charming, but lacked something of intensity. She did the commanded dance well. Beatrice La Palme was an attractive Nuri. The other characters were taken by Florence Coughlan, Louise Haussmann, Cordelia Latham, Alfred Kaufman, Louis d'Angelo, Vernon Dalhart and Frank Dalhart. The singing and the acting in the main, by the chorus as cue could drive off the animal.

Policemen Kohn and Gannon were at Grand and Main streets when the dog came bounding across that corner. The animal jumped for Kohn, who thought at first that it was only playing. The tails of his uniform coat were torn off and finally Kohn was thrown to the ground. The collie kept snapping at him and before relief came Kohn was bitten fourteen times. Kohn got his hands at the throat of the animal and held it off from his body while he yelled to Gannon to kill WOMAN FOUGHT RESCUER.
